
Montréal Finally Has a Terrace Map

Terrasse Season is a free, bilingual directory of 200+ terraces, patios, and rooftops across Montréal, searchable by neighbourhood, type, and features. Ready for the 2026 season.

The Problem It Solves

Montréal has one of the best terrace cultures in North America. Finding a good one when you actually want it is harder than it should be.

The problem isn't a lack of coverage. There's plenty of that. It's that a blog post can't tell you what's open right now, what's walkable from where you're standing, whether there's a covered option because the forecast looks uncertain, or whether a spot you had in mind has even opened for the season yet. You can't filter a blog post.

Google Maps isn't much help either. Unless a place literally has "terrace" in its name, it won't show up in that kind of search. Most people figure this out on their phone, already outside, when the weather just turned nice. Terrasse Season is built for that decision: open the map, see what's nearby and open, go.

What It Does

- 200+ terraces across 24 Montréal neighbourhoods, from Old Montréal to Ahuntsic to NDG
- Interactive map with a browsable sidebar list. See the whole city at once, click any spot to explore.
- Open right now filter — shows only terraces currently open based on live hours. Useful when you're deciding on the spot.
- "What's open this season?": shows which terraces are confirmed open for the season. Useful in April and May, when some spots set up at the first sign of sun while others aren't ready yet.
- Filters by neighbourhood, terrace type (rooftop, sidewalk, backyard, courtyard, balcony, garden, plaza), dog-friendly, covered, and heated
- Sort by distance from your location
- Reviews — users can rate and review any listing. Ratings are visible on every terrace page.
- Live hours from Google Places, refreshed before each season
- Bilingual — full English and French interface
- Free, no account required, works on any phone

Fast Facts

Website	terrasseseason.com
Listings	200+ terraces
Neighbourhoods	24 across Montréal
Languages	English and French
Price	Free, no account required
Hours data	Google Places, updated each season
Terrace types	Rooftop, sidewalk, backyard, courtyard, balcony, garden, plaza

The Data

Montréal's food and lifestyle press covers terraces well every season. Time Out, Tastet, Cult MTL, Narcity, Daily Hive, Montreal Diaries, MTL Blog, and others put real editorial effort into the standout spots. A great editorial list and a useful directory solve different problems, though. Terrasse Season is built to solve the second one: a complete, searchable resource covering the full range of the city's terraces, not just a season's highlights.

Every listing is verified before it goes in. Features like covered, heated, and dog-friendly are only shown when confirmed. If something isn't listed, it means we don't have a confirmed source yet, not that the answer is no. Hours come from Google Places and are refreshed before each season. Anyone can suggest a missing spot or flag a correction directly through the site; every submission is reviewed before publishing.

Screenshots

Desktop — map and list view

Desktop — terrace detail panel

Mobile — list view

Mobile — map view

Terrasse Season
Les terrasses de Montréal

+ Soumettre

EN

Q Chercher par nom, cuisine,

Tous les quar... ▾

Tous les types ▾

Filtres ▾

190 terrasses

☰ Liste (190)

📍 Carte

Terrasse Nelligan

Rooftop

Old Montreal

Bar sur le toit iconique de l'Hôtel Nelligan avec vue sur le Vieux-Montréal et le fleuve Saint-Laurent. Réputé pour ses...

~80 places

Terrasse sur l'Auberge

Rooftop

Old Montreal

Toit du cinquième étage de l'Auberge du Vieux-Port avec vue

Terrasse Season
Les terrasses de Montréal

+ Soumettre

EN

Q Chercher par nom, cuisine, quartier...

Tous les types ▾

Filtres ▾

190 terrasses

☰ Liste (190)

📍 Carte

Map of Montreal showing terrace locations. The map is densely populated with red sun icons representing terraces. Key areas labeled include Rosemont-La Petite-Patrie, Old Montreal (Vieux-Montréal), Westmount, and the Plateau. Specific landmarks like Colline d'Outremont (211 m), Mont-Royal (233 m), and Colline de l'Abri (200 m) are marked. The map also shows the St. Lawrence River (fleuve Saint-Laurent) and the Old Port (Vieux-Port). The bottom right corner of the map includes the Leaflet and OpenStreetMap logos.

Story Angles

- "Montréal finally has a terrace map": the city has one of the best patio scenes in Canada and, until now, no single place to find all of it
- Neighbourhood breakdown: which areas have the most rooftops, the most covered terraces, the most dog-friendly spots
- Seasonal resource to share before the first warm weekend of the year
- Bar and restaurant owners can submit their own terraces, and anyone can flag corrections
- Bilingual from the start, for both communities
- Five months a year: a tool built specifically for Montreal's short outdoor season, when every warm weekend counts
- Weather-proofing your plans: filter for covered and heated spots when the forecast is uncertain
- Community ratings: users can review any listing, building a local quality layer on top of the map over time

About Terrasse Season

Terrasse Season is a local project, built by a Montréaler who got tired of the same problem every spring: wanting to sit outside somewhere new and having no good way to find it. Montréal's terrace season runs about five months. It starts fast and ends before you're ready. This felt like something the city was missing. Anyone can suggest a missing terrace or flag a correction directly through the site.

Ready-to-Use Article

Free to publish as-is or adapt. Credit: Terrasse Season / terrasseseason.com

Terrasse Season Is the Montreal Terrace Map We've All Needed

~340 words • Lifestyle / City / Food & Drink

Montreal has something like a hundred different "best terrace" lists. What it has not had, until now, is a single place to actually find one.

Terrasse Season launched ahead of the 2026 patio season as a free, searchable directory of more than 200 terraces, patios, and rooftops across 24 Montreal neighbourhoods. The site does what no best-of list can: filter by what you actually need right now. Dog-friendly? Covered, in case it rains? Open at 3 p.m. on a Tuesday in Rosemont? You can search for all of that.

The tool is built around a map. Every listing sits on it, pinned to the right address. A sidebar lets you browse without clicking around. The "open right now" filter is the one that makes the most sense when you're already out the door: it cuts the full directory down to only the places that are actually open at that moment, based on real hours from Google Places, updated before each season. A second button, "What's open this season?", shows which terraces are confirmed open for the year, a useful check in April and May, when some spots set up at the first sign of sun while others aren't ready yet.

The data behind it is more careful than most. Features like covered seating, heated spaces, and dog-friendly policies are only listed when a source confirms them. If a field is blank, it means there is no confirmed information yet, not that the answer is no. Anyone can flag a correction or suggest a missing spot directly through the site, and every submission gets reviewed before it goes live.

It is a local project, built by a Montrealer who got tired of the same problem every spring. The season runs about five months. It starts fast and ends before you are ready, and every warm weekend counts. The site is bilingual and does not require an account.

terrasseseason.com

Contact

EMAIL

hello@terrasseseason.com

WEBSITE

terrasseseason.com